HONGKONG, MONDAY, AUGUST 3, 1868. THE SWIMMING BATH AND

PRAYA.

THE remarks put forth in our last Fri.

day's issue regarding the removal of the

Swimming Bath resulted in our being informed that the committee were unjustly credited with a want of energy in the matter. We are sincerely glad to learn that such is the case, though we are still of opinion that a general meeting of those interested in the maintenance of the structure in its present position would have more emphatically marked the strong public interest felt in the matter. than the efforts, sufficiently strenuous which the Secretary is now making, to definitely ascertain His Excellency's intentions in the matter. The delay in coming to an understanding arises, we believe, from the difficulty felt by the Governor in deciding upon a suitable site at which to re-erect it after removal. He is fully aware that to remove it to Kowloong would place a practical prohibition upon its general use; and, while most desirous to have it taken away from its present site, is equally desirous to select another which shall as far as possible meet the views of the bathing community. A hint has been given of selecting the sea frontage of the Commis sariat buildings; and assuming (which we trust there is no absolute need to do) that the bath must be removed to a distance from its present site, the position in question is perhaps the next best which could be selected. But the shallowness of the water, the nature of the bottom, and the increased distance from the business part of the town are serious drawbacks. Our own suggestion would be to remove it from the central position on the promenade it now of the small fives-court attached to the barracks. A wooden platform would afford connection with the road, without interfering with the government enclosure, while the view of the harbour from the promenade would remain almost totally unobstructed. It is however satisfactory to know that His Excellency realizes the importance attached to the Swimming Bath by the community generally, and, while anxious to improve the town, is not willing to cause more inconvenience to individuals than can be tended Praya sufficiently evince the wishes of the Governor on the former point. But, in continuation of the remarks we made in a previous issue, we must urge upon his attention the inconveniences to which we then alluded. must be noted that the width of the present roadway is entirely insufficient to render it either a favourite or even useable promenade for the Colony generally; and as we learn that a proposition we made some time since is very generally approved, we would again call attention to it. This is, to carry the "Queen's Road" past the Eastern face of the City Hall and within the row of trees now planted on the bathing Praya, closing up the existing road across the Parade Ground for all except foot passengers. The Praya, thus more than doubled in width, with the outer space kept clear from coolie porters, chairs, carriages, and horses might then indeed become a favourite promenade—"the promenade of the East, as, we believe, it is His Excellency's wish to make it. And more than this man collateral advantages would be gained by this slight diversion of the carriage traffic. The Parade Ground would be unbroken for military use, and the stoppages of traffic on field days and the obstacle presented by the existing railings along the now Queen's Road to the satisfactory manceuvring of troops would be done away with. The cricketers would benefit even more by the unbroken sweep of turf as permission to use the ground upon all non-parade days would of course be readily accorded from the fact that a cricket tlub is the best ground leveller and preserver which exists, and that the use of the turf by our Colonial club would immensely benefit the field for military purposes. The small pathway of which we propose the retention might be kept closed if needful lake's lengthy but highly interesting description of this celebrated incident in the Crimean war, as given in his just pub lished 4th volume of his "Invasion of the Crimea." We are compelled to omit his notes, as they would swell the extract to too great a length. To assist the general reader we may briefly narrate the nature of the "error" which led to brilliant but murderous results. On the morning of October 25 (the day of the charge), the Russians had captured several English guns from the Turks posted to defend the redoubts on the Causeway heights. The Light Brigade (soon after Scarlett's Cavalry victory) received an order to attack the Russians on the Causeway heights, and recover the guns. can be no mistaking the terms of the The Brigade at this time was fronting the North Valley, at the head which, one mile and a quarter distant. the Russians were posted, in form resembling three sides of an oblong square. One prisoner was said Colonel Ponsonby, Commanding the 2nd up in the direction of the heights. Inexpress purpose of fighting another faction; himself attacked with cholera, to which he endeavoured to rectify it (as described below). We now take up Kinglake's narrative. After receiving his instructions from Lord Lucan, -

Although the part of the enemy's line | duced by the loss just sustained which Lord Cardigan meant to attack lay as yet very distant before him, it was eviteries betwixt which he must pass, that his brigade would not long be in motion without incurring a heavy fire; and, upon the whole, he seems to have considered that almost from the first his advance was in the nature of a charge.

Followed immediately by his first line, at a greater distance, by the other regiments of his brigade, Lord Cardigan moved forward at a trot, taking strictly the direction in which his troops before moving had fronted, and making straight down the valley towards the battery which crossed it at the distance of about a mile and a quarter. Before Lord Cardigan had ridden a hundred paces in advance, he encountered a sight which filled him with anger. Right before him he saw Uaptain Nolan audaciously riding across his front from left to right; but not content with a trespass which alone would have been shocking enough to Lord Cardigan's orderly mind, Captain Nolau, turning round in his saddle, was shouting, and waving his sword as though he would address the brigade. We now know that when Nolan thus strangely deported himself, he was riding in a direction which might well give significance to his shouts and gestures; for, instead of choosing a line of advance like that pursued by Lord Cardigan, he rode crossing the front of the brigade, and bearing away to the right front of our advancing squadrons, as though he would go on to the spot on the Causeway Heights where the Odessa regiment stood nosted: Considering, however, that Nolan must have been acting with a full knowledge of the enemy's position, as well as Lord Raglan's true meaning, and that the time of his appealing thus eagerly to our Light Cavalry by gesture and voice, he was not only on the right front of our line but was actually bearing away diagonally in the very direction of the Causewa Heights, there is plainly more room surmising that the aide-de-camp's unxiety had been roused by seeing our squadrons advance without having first changed their front, and that what he now sought was to undo the mistake of Lord Lucan, to bene our troops from the path which led down the fatal North Valley, and make them is cline to their right-make them so incline to their right as to strike the true point of attack which Lord Raglan had twice over But a Russian shell bursting on the righ front of Lord Cardigan now throw out a fragment which met Nolan full on the chest and tore a wav into his heart. The swor dropt from his hand; but the arm wit which he was waving it the moment before still remained high uplifted in the air, and the grip of the practised horseman remaining as yet unrelaxed still held him firm is his saddle. Missing the perfect hand of hi master, and finding the accustomed governauce now succeeded by daugling reins, the horse all at once wheeled about, and began to gallop back upon the front of the advancing brigade. Then from what had been Nolan—and his form was still erect in the saddle, his sword arm still high in the air -there burst forth a cry so strange and appalling that the hearer who rode the near est to him has always called it "unearthly. And in truth, I imagine, the sound result ed from no human will, but rather from those spasmodic forces which may act upon the bodily frame when life, as a power, has rode on till he had passed through the interval of the 13th Light Dragoous. Then at last he dropt out of the saddle. The shell which slew Nolan was the first. I I believe, of the missiles which our squawhich shows with how sound a judgment

Thus when Captain White, of the 17th Lancers (who commanded the squadron of direction), became "anxious," as he frankly expressed it, " to get out of such a murderous fire, and into the guns, as being the best of the two evils," and endeavouring, with that view, to "force the pace," press ed forward so much as to be almost alongside of the chief's bridle-arm, Lord Cardigan checked this impatience by laying his sword across the Captain's breast, telling him at the same time not to try to force the of the brigade. (To be continued.)

MR. GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN. (Daily Telegraph.

It was rather a stretch of terms to call the extraordinary oration of June 10th "a lecture on the rights of Irish-American citizens." Mr. Train's remarks on that head were in the proportion of fat Sir John's ha'p'erth of bread to the prodigiously long bill for sack. The lecturer had no reason to complain of his reception. At a table on the platform sat a lady, a sister, as we were told, of "Colonel" Burke, now undergoing punishment for treason-felony. Mr. Train entered the hall at half-past eight, and was greeted with something approaching to feryour, hats and handkerchiefs being waved from the galleries and from the area below. Ten or fifteen minutes elapsed before he stepped on the platform; and then the applause was renewed. A young labouring man of respectable appearance and manner took the chair, and introduced the lecturer in a few complimentary words. Mr. Train then. stripping off a loose wrapper, stepped jauntily forward in a brass-buttoned, tightlyfitting tail-coat, ran his fingers through his pair waited till the hat-waving and the cheers were made an end of, and then asked 'Am I in America to-night or in England?' In Ireland," cried somebody near the latform. "Then," rejoined Mr. Train, I am in America;" at which geographical hyperbole there were rours of approbation. The lecturer on the rights of Irish-American citizens then spoke of the war against secession in America, and the sympathy with s cession in England, or in that section of English society which he called "the dress circle." It may be remarked, as an instance of the wonderful command which a confident possessor of a loud and flexible voice has over the feelings and, for a time.

the understanding, of his audience, that Mr. Train, at this point of his address, positively induced the unthinking majority in that hall to hiss the name of Brougham; an act of forgetfulness which a few working men seemed instantly ashamed of. In continuation of the lecture on the rights of Irish-American citizens, Mr. Train reminded his hearers that the thieves, scamps, and buccaneers who landed at Hastings were the progenitors of the lords who insulted the working class in these days by calling them the mob. He then referred, rather unconnectedly, to "the lickspittle press of Loudon and England," to Sir John Shelley -leaving out the "Sir"-to the secretservice fund, to informers and detectives. and to the assumed fact that two-thirds of the House of Commons either hold the land themselves or are the brothers. cousins, uncles, or "aunts" of those who rold it. He next brought forward the interesting subject of his candidature for the American presidency; and then, by easy transition, got upon the theme of a plan of his own for "educating the people of England to understand what we (the people of So far as concerned the first line, this i America) understood in 1776." Taxation, he guns in their front, as well as from the got to day," said Mr Train, "a ship of spirit broke out, some striving to outride | pague : and then, when I have gathered their contrades, some determining not to be round my board the members of your Parliament Houses and the flower of your But although he rode singly, and al- country, then, perhaps, I may accept your though, as we have seen, he rigidly ab return."
